Others of the Cabinet Not Yet Arrived, but Expected—Secretary and Mrs. Kirkwood—Mrs. Garfield's Evenings—Personal Notes and Sketches of Interest.

The wives of four of the Cabinet officers held large and brilliant receptions yesterday. viz: Mrs. Blaine, Mrs. Windom, Mrs. Lincoln, and Mrs. Hunt. The residence of the Secretary of State, 821 Fifteenth street, were again the gala spot, it used to wear when, as Speaker of the House of Representatives, he once before belonged to the whole American people. Mrs. Blaine's reception nearly every other legation were represented by their chief officers and numerous attaches; also ladies of almost all the families of the above. The wives and daughters of Senators, ex-Cabinet officers, the Judiciary, the army and navy, leading business men, and of many leading members and friends of the Congress were among the callers. Mrs. Blaine dignified but gracious hostess was assisted by

At the residence of the Secretary of the Treasury 1116 Vermont avenue, an equally distinguished company were gathered. With Mrs. Winslow were her sister, Miss Hatch, and her friend, Miss Norton and after four o'clock the Secretary joined them

Conversation at this delightful home was admirably free from stiffness and constraint. Mrs. Windom has a blended intelligence and affability that at once establish pleasant relations between herself and her guests. Secretary Windom represents, in the best sense, the Quaker element in public life, and his manner is as unaffected and unworldly as it is courtly and diplomatic. He owns frankly to missing the Senate and its pleasing associations, and to feeling a sincere regret when its doors are closed behind him.

Mr. Lincoln received in the east front parlor a number of young men, who were present to pay respects to the representative of their own youth and to express their hearty admiration of his career.

holds were especially numerous. The graceful, girlish figure of Mrs. Lincoln acquired a certain grave stateliness from the reception dress of black Lyons velvet which she wore. She was a pleasant picture in the midst of the throng of greetings that initiated her into her new, yet not unknown, life. As the daughter of Secretary Harlan, of the Interior, she had already experienced a foretaste of

In approaching the pleasant residence of the Secretary of the Navy, 1466 Rhode Island avenue, the smell of fresh earth from the newly-dug front yard, where the workmen were still busied was an exhilarating and grateful reminder of spring. The parlors here, as elsewhere, were filled with representative names in Washington life. The charming hostess wore a superb black tulle dress finished with a jacket-waist heavily embroidered in kind. She has the ready tact that springs from a good heart, blended with thorough knowledge of society and its ways. No lady in Cabinet circles will be more widely popular than Mrs. Hunt. She was assisted yesterday by three most agreeable ladies—Miss Hunt, a daughter of the Secretary, Mrs. Colonel Farquhar, and Miss Urquhart, of New Orleans. At most of these receptions light refreshments were offered, including tea, chocolate, and punch.

Of the three remaining Cabinet officers' wives Mrs. Kirkwood was prevented from receiving the many callers that were made upon her, at 1344 Tenth street, by severe indisposition. Her gold and silver jewelry, and her beautiful willow-leaf and month the Secretary and herself will visit towns a week or two, and on their return to Washington will decide whether to remain at their present comfortable and handsome quarters, in the family of a relative, or to take a house of their own, probably preferring the former course for the approaching summer and fall. The Secretary's present location, beside being in a high and healthful section of the city, is admirably situated with respect to his Department, but it is a trifle remote from the

At the reception yesterday the visiting countenances were a study in tasteful variety. Some ladies wore colors of a gent, while others displayed brilliant and glowing tints, as in midwinter. There was a general supply of remark that an unusual number of gentlemen were among the callers. At some places they seemed almost in the majority.

Ex-Postmaster-General Maynard is still in the city, sojourning at the Abbott House. His wife, who is quite an invalid, takes her meals in her own

The entertainment by General and Mrs. Beale on Tuesday evening was in honor of Lord and Lady Grenville, H. visiting at the British Legation.

Mrs. Garfield for the present receives evening callers on Tuesdays and Fridays, the President joining her when he can. Unless by special arrangement, callers are not ordinarily received on the other evenings of the week. An agreeable company of perhaps twenty or thirty persons met there casually last Tuesday evening. Mrs. Garfield's method and spirit, as thus far developed, are very appreciatively spoken of by ladies of the Cabinet families. Every indication points to a successful administration of social affairs, largely contributed to by these seven ladies of experience and culture, who gave themselves, not ostentatiously, but cheerfully and with thorough understanding of their duties, to a life full of exertions and fatigues, but rich in opportunities for graceful service to the Republic.

Dr. Carver Wins the Match.

LONDON, March 16.—In the third stage of the pigeon-shooting match for the championship of the world and the Sportsman's challenge cup, at Hendon to-day. Dr. Carver beat Graham by a score of 40 to 35, and Scott beat Gordon by a score of 40 to 39. The deciding heat, at 100 birds each, was then shot in four stages. At the beginning Scott was rather the favorite in the betting. The scores were as follows: Carver, 21, 18, 21, 19—79; Scott, 15, 19, 24, 16—74. Dr. Carver thus wins the title of champion, the cup, and £250 stakes. Immediately after the match had been decided, Mr.

Scott challenged Dr. Carver to a match for the cup and $200 a side, the contest to be according to the rules of the game, and the winner to be the victor. The match was to be decided within two months. A gentleman present offered to bet $200 that Scott would win.

The scores in the glass ball match between Dr. Carver and Mr. Scott at the end of the seventh night's shooting were: Scott, 5,512; Carver, 6,393.

Sauerkraut, Speck, and Apple Saus.

St. LOUIS, March 16.—Yesterday a very poor family of Bohemians, consisting of four people, ate fresh pork, kraut, and apple sausage, and shortly afterward were taken violently sick. One of the children has died. Several physicians have explained the case, but state that they can find no case of mineral poison, and an examination of the meat discloses no trichine.

Shot Her Betrayer.

LOS ANGELES, March 16.—F. I. Forster was shot dead on the street to-day by Hestoria Aborta, a Spanish girl, who states that Forster had betrayed her under a promise of marriage. Forster was connected with some of the oldest Spanish

Harper's Magazine for April comes from Joseph Shillington and contains a more than usual amount of entertaining reading. The illustrated articles are "The Green Mountains in Sugar Time," by W. Riding; "Salisbury Cathedral," by Arthur Gilman; "Indian Education at Hampton and Carlisle," by Helen W. Ludlow; "Italian Life in New York," by Charlotte Adams.

The illustrations by Rogers, "My Art Embroidery," by Alex. F. Oakley, "My Farm in Switzerland," by S. H. M. Byers, United States Consul at Zurich. The two serial novels—"Anne," by Constance Fenimore Woolson, and "A Laidieean," are continued. The former illustrated by Reinhardt, and the latter by Du Maurier. Sherwood Bonner contributes a strong story, "Two Storms." W. H. Beard, under the title of "An Artist's Reminiscences," tells a touching story of his boyhood, which he also illustrates.

with a charming picture. J. T. Rowlands, in his poem, "The Indian Camp," presents a striking picture of the American Indian of to-day. Other poems are contributed by Walt Whitman, Paul H. Hayne, and William Gibson. The editorial departments are filled with timely, instructive, and entertaining matter.
